

Meet: Bree Van De Kamp

4354 Wisteria Lane, Fairview, Eagle State

Bree Van de Kamp is a searing, uptight perfectionist. Her strong resolve and proper demeanor have caused tension in her marriage and home-life. As a mother of two teenagers, her icy cool nerves were often tested. She struggled to rein in her rebellious, and at times soulless son, Andrew, and fought to give her self-absorbed daughter, Danielle, a proper perspective on life.

During a routine meeting with the neighborhood call-girl, her husband Rex suffered a heart attack, thus shining a light on his dark secrets. Bree reluctantly cared for him during his recovery after her children's insistence. Her marriage was further troubled when she began dating the local pharmacist, George Williams, much to her husband's dismay. Then Rex took matters into his own hands when he went to ward off George, only inciting his jealousy which led him to begin tampering with Rex's heart medication. Bree was eventually widowed when after months of poisoning by their pharmacist, Rex's heart gave way.

Despite all this, her "perfect housewife" routine remained nearly unshaken during the past year. She was able to keep up appearances at the country club, find time to bake muffins for her incarcerated arch nemesis, Maisy Gibbons and somehow maintain her perfectly quaffed flip.

Next Sunday

On next Sunday's "Desperate Housewives," Robin's presence on Wisteria Lane makes the men perk up and the women jealous. Lynette says. Katherine, who's back from her stay at the mental institution. Lynette is horrified to find out that her son, Parker, has offered Robin money to have sex with him! Parker explains that he's the only one of his friends who's still a virgin. But he observes to Lynette, "Guys always pay for sex in some way, dinner, flowers, antique rings." She takes offense, since he just gave her a ring for their anniversary and is now expecting not only sex but an "upgrade." She explains that the reason wasn't because of the expensive dinner, but because he had brought over a lightbulb to make her apartment more safe, and we can see the lightbulb go on in Tom's head. Still, there are a lot of possibilities as to who might bite the dust. Could it be Angie's son Danny, who attempted suicide himself? Could it be Nick or even Angie herself, who admitted in Sunday's episode that she had killed a man?

A dark horse for being six feet under might just be Orson, as Kyle MacLachlan's character could be written off as Bree attempts to pursue a real relationship with Susan's ex-husband Carl.
