With the retirement of Tiki Barber, Jacobs took over the starting running back spot for the Giants in the 2007 season. He injured his knee in the first game of the season against the Dallas Cowboys, but returned four weeks later against the New York Jets to rush for 100 yards and a touchdown. Jacobs would miss two more games later in the season with a hamstring injury, but finish the regular season with rushing totals of 1,011 yards and four touchdowns on 201 carries. He also added 23 receptions for 174 yards and two touchdowns. In the playoffs, Jacobs started every game during the Giants' run to Super Bowl XLII, which they would win over the previously undefeated New England Patriots. On January 13, 2008, Jacobs scored the winning touchdown against the #1 seeded Dallas Cowboys in the NFC Divisional Playoffs.
